Speaking of the almanac, it is now nip and tuck betwixt light and darkness.

Poor King Frederick Augustus of Saxony! He can't seem to get over his affection for bad rubbish.

It might have been different if Vice President Fairbanks had taken the precaution to provide his luncheon guests with a few cloves.

Care should be taken not to get a seat behind the latest style of feminine headgear. It obscures the entire landscape or foreground.

An eastern man advertises seven thousand snakes for sale. There was a man in the Globe jail recently who had ten thousand to give away.

All further anxiety about the weather in the great grain-producing regions of the country may now be dismissed. Our anticipated $7,000,000,000 crops are secure beyond peradventure.

This proposition to make bank notes of different colors, varying according to the denomination of the bills, is at least well calculated to give point and pertinence to the inquiry of the money-vaulter as to the color of your money. Otherwise it is a somewhat fanciful proposition.

It is probably true that the public welfare and safety do not call for the rigid enforcement of the law which requires the placing of exit signs over the doors in the interiors of the country churches. What they seem to need most is more general attention to the entrance signs outside.

Norman Bridge, M. D., deploring our manifold frailties, mentions particularly our lack of frankness, one with another. Ask a friend to go into a restaurant with you, he says, and inquire what you shall order for the meal. Ten to one your friend will say beefsteak because he imagines you want it, and you order beefsteak, when in reality both of you are longing for tripe.

So long as our most distinguished college presidents persist in disagreeing so radically and diametrically on the question as to the comparative merits of the leading athletic sports for intercollegiate purposes, the thousands of students can safely be depended upon to decide. That great body of intelligent young men can hardly go far wrong.

Some day, perhaps, our immigration laws will be so amended, as to provide against outside competition by buxom bachelor maids from abroad with our excessive supply of native spinsters. Meanwhile, such incidents as the coming to our hospitable shores of more than 1,000 young women on a single liner, who are widely advertised as marriageable, will continue, and our unprotected maidens must take their chances with all comers. This is a free and romantic country.

WITH CHEER, OR GRUNTING?

In India, huge elephants are employed in all kinds of service, from that of nurses for infant children to the heaviest and roughest work in stone quarries. The Hindu mother who wants to be away for a couple of hours from home—and still feel that her baby is in as safe hands as though deposited in a Parisian creche or a chair-table nursery for the children of poor women who have to be abroad washing clothes or scrubbing floors for a wretched livelihood—seeks and finds her creche in the tender solicitude of the domestic elephant tethered just outside her lowly cabin.

So, simply carrying out her crawling, scrabbling little one of a year old, she sets it down on the close-cropped herbage and quietly intimates to the elephant that she will leave it in his exclusive charge until she gets back home. Tethered by a band around a hind ankle and an iron chain attached to an immovable post, the huge mountain of a nurse still enjoys a free range of twenty to twenty-five feet all about a circle of that radius.

Quite different from this, however, is a sight often witnessed in the stone quarries, where a gang of elephants will be seen engaged in lifting with their trunks, transporting and piling

NATIONAL MCKINLEY MEMORIAL, CANTON.

The nation's memorial to President McKinley, unveiled at Canton Sept. 30, cost over half a million dollars and will have an endowment fund of one-fifth that sum. The money was contributed in small amounts. In the front of the mausoleum is a lake in which the massive dome and the statue of McKinley are mirrored, and inside the mausoleum are sarcophagi containing the remains of President and Mrs. McKinley. Nearby niches contain the bodies of their children. The statue of President McKinley is the work of Charles Henry Niehaus, and the mausoleum was designed by H. Van Buren Magonigle.

up enormous blocks of granite. The sense of moral obligation prevailing among them to render a fair day's work for a fair day's pay impresses the beholder as an edifying Sunday school lesson to fallen human nature.

Soon, however, will the attention of the onlooker be attracted to the goings on of a single elephant of the gang. His mahout will tell you he is the best elephant of the crew, that his output equals that of any other two, and that there is simply no limit to his sense of moral obligation to the company that maintains him, to the British government of India, and to the god of elephants, in whose awful presence he endeavors to do everything as "in his great taskmaster's eye."

None the less, it is plain to see that this huge pachyderm has one bad out. He is neither a cheerful nor a happy elephant; a disgruntled bondsman of duty, and never a child of grace.

Everything he does is accompanied with a grumble, a grunt, a groan, at times a bellow of protesting despair.

All this, the mahout assures the visitor, exerts a demoralizing influence on the rest of the gang, and tends to neutralize the effect of his example. While they revere the persistent virtue of old "Kohinoor," they fail to be won and inspired by it. It undermines their faith that the "ways of duty are ways of pleasantness and all its paths are peace," and that "religion never was designed to make our pleasures less."

Here today in America never was the cry more rife for men and women ruled by an inflexible sense of duty. They are sadly needed in the family, in the school, in the church, in the factory, in the social circle—none of which can prosper without them. But in all advertisements for them ought not the clause to be added and emphasized, "men and women of a genial, cheerful, inspiring type of the sense of duty," and not of the kind whose grim or pathetic or despairing stripe of virtue will tend to demoralize the whole rest of the gang of us disillusionized elephants?

In Arizona

At Bisbee Officer E. K. Martin shot and fatally wounded a drunken Mexican named Primetorio, who was rushing upon Officer Gentry with a murderous knife just outside a little cabin in the rear of Berger's place on Eighth street. The ball entered the man's stomach and came out near the hip. He died seven hours after receiving the wound. Officers exonerated.

Short Stories of the Street

Joe Gallagher, the popular St. Louis traveling man, who was at the Dominion the other day, has an enviable reputation with the traveling public for his stories. One of his latest, told of his experience in a New Mexico hotel, hits strongly at some of the more effeminate gentlemen who make hotels their homes.

"A friend of mine has gained considerable notoriety among the boys on account of his antipathy for many of the inhabitants to be found in the hotels of any of the small country towns. Many a time he has been known to leave his bed in the middle of the night and search for more comfortable and agreeable quarters. Recently he landed at a small town in New Mexico. I happened to be there that night and when I saw him enter I immediately scented trouble.

"That place is known all through the territory for the droves of rates which swarm about the premises. And if there was anything that friend of mine abhorred it was a rat. Well, he got to his room. I was sitting in the lobby reading about an hour after he had retired, when suddenly I was startled by a racket on the upper floor. It was followed a second later by my friend, his clothes under his arm, making a hurried exit from the room. Running up to the hotel clerk, he expostulated excitedly against the rates.

"They ran all over the bed and all over the floor. Finally I tried to shoot them out. I turned on the light and there were two big ones in the center of the floor fighting like tigers. "Well, what do you want for 50 cents," calmly asked the clerk, "a bull fight?"

On the Valley outgoing train the other morning two traveling men were sitting in the smoking car. The only other occupant was a man who looked as if he might be a miner, evidently a foreigner. He was smoking a pipe that he must have brought over with him when he came. It had the black accumulations of years around the barrel, and it smelled. The two traveling men stood the stench for a while and were just about to leave when one of them thought of a better plan. Approaching the old man, he said very pleasantly: "I beg your pardon, but we simply can't stand the smell of that pipe. This is a good cigar (handing him one); if you would smoke it instead of that pipe we would be very much obliged to you."

"Certainly," said the old man, knocking his pipe against his heel and putting it away. "But I don't smoke the pipe because I can't afford cigars. I smoke it because I like it. I can afford good cigars of my own. I have only been in Arizona eighteen months and I have accumulated a little over $10,000."

"Say," said the traveling man, "would you mind filling that pipe again and letting me smoke it a while?"

The absent minded man comes to the front again. This time in the guise of a young first-time papa. For several years this happy parent has been blessed with nephews and nieces galore, so that the title "Uncle George" has become familiar with him.

The absent mindedness cropped out when, sitting alongside of his happy wife, he tenderly picked up the new arrival and to the astonishment of several persons who were in the room, he crooned: "Baby doesn't know his Uncle George, does he?"

"Now that cold weather is approaching," said a prominent Globe physician, "it may interest you to know that a daily rub with coarse salt after the morning bath is one of the most efficacious preventatives of colds, as well as one of the greatest agencies to avoid the discomforts attending cold weather. Workers in salt factories are able to wear light underwear in blizzard weather without discomfort, as you may have read. They rarely use overcoats, and, what is as important or more so, is the fact that pulmonary diseases or those of the other respiratory organs are almost unknown among them. It is consoling to know that salt is still cheap."

Notice
I am the man who will, without extra charge, go anywhere in the city to take an acknowledgment, day or night, rain or shine; also draw up deeds, releases, mortgages and wills at small cost; buggy always ready in front of Brown's store. Phone 441. L. H. Brown, the notary public.

Thomas A. Edison, the great American inventor, says: "Fully eighty per cent of the illness of mankind comes from eating improper food or too much food; people are inclined to over-indulge themselves." This is where indigestion finds its beginning in nearly every case. The stomach can do just so much work and no more, and when you overload it, or when you eat the wrong kind of food, the digestive organs cannot possibly do the work demanded of them. It is at such times that the stomach needs help; it demands help, and warns you by headaches, belching, sour stomach, nausea and indigestion. You should attend to this at once by taking something that will actually do the work for the stomach. Kodol will do this. It is a combination of natural digestants and vegetable acids and contains the same juices found in a healthy stomach. It is pleasant to take. It digests what you eat. Sold by Hanna's Drug Store.

Don't Worry With the Old Stove!

JR VERY BEST HOT BLAST

Nothing is more injurious to health than worry. Constant dropping of water wears away the hardest stone. Constantly worrying with your old worn-out stove will help to break down your health. Don't worry with it any longer. You've been planning to buy a new stove or range for some time. Don't put it off—buy it now! That will last the longest; that will always bake satisfactorily; that will do the greatest amount of work with the least coal; that will not need constant repairing. Then, buy a Daisy Anchor Stove or Matchless Steel Range.

They are the only ones sold with an absolute guarantee on the lidings of the firebox. They are made of the very best material through and through. The lids and centers are extra heavy and are arched and ribbed so they will not warp or crack, and the oven plates cannot buckle and let ashes sift into your bread.

They permit perfect regulation of draft and will hold the heat longer and do more cooking with the same amount of coal than any other stove or range in America.

We'll take your old stove as part payment, and you can pay us the balance on terms to suit yourself. Just 'phone Main 1304 for a salesman to come and answer any question and make you a price on your old stove. Complete Home-Furnishers.
